BOWA opens Middleburg office

Equestrian construction among specialty services

BOWA Builders Inc., one of the nation's largest whole-house remodelers, has announced the opening of a new office on East Washington Street in Middleburg.

"We continue to see a rising demand for custom home and large-scale remodeling in Loudoun and Fauquier counties," said Joe Burke, BOWA's new western division manager. "We won't be competing with residential developers, however. Our goal is to help existing homeowners improve upon what they already have."

BOWA Builders is headquartered in McLean. The company said its expansion west comes in response to numerous requests for high-end construction services from current and prospective local clients now residing in Loudoun and Fauquier counties. The company provides custom home design and construction as well as large-scale additions and renovations.

Given local interest in horseback riding, BOWA's expertise in equestrian facilities construction provides an appropriate segue into the community. BOWA has completed numerous equestrian projects throughout the area, including barns, indoor arenas and riding rings.

BOWA Builders Inc. has been serving the immediate Washington metropolitan area for the past 17 years. The company's contract construction volume in these established markets is expected to see steady growth in the coming years. In 2003, the company launched its home projects division, focusing on small- to mid-size remodeling projects for new and existing clients.

Partners Josh Baker and Larry Weinberg, classmates at the University of Virginia, built decks their first year in business, doing all the labor themselves.
