BOWA Builders, a residential construction firm with an office in Middleburg, has been named the 2006 "Remodeler of the Year" by the national industry magazine Professional Remodelers.

"This is a tremendous honor for BOWA," CEO Larry Weinberg said. "Our team has worked very hard to improve our processes and practices over the past 18 years. While our top priority will always be serving our clients and earning their respect, it's encouraging to receive this recognition from our peers."

The annual award, which was presented Oct. 20 at the 2006 Remodeling Show in Chicago, recognizes excellence in all aspects of remodeling, from a reputable reputation to outstanding personnel. The award also honors demonstrated innovation in areas such as design, management, building practices, community relations, client satisfaction and productivity.

Among the reasons that BOWA was chosen this year's winner was the company's continued growth, the recent launch of an on-time guarantee program and its new team handbook, which documents the company's best practices, construction processes and policies to better serve its clients.

This year's awards joins the more than 70 honors that the company has won.

BOWA Builders, which was founded in 1988, has offices in McLean and Middleburg that serve clients throughout the metropolitan Washington DC area. The $38 million company employs 90 people.
